

A large, thick red handwritten letter 'F' is centered on a light gray background with horizontal blue lines. The letter is drawn with a single continuous stroke, giving it a slightly irregular, hand-drawn appearance. The top bar of the 'F' is slightly curved, and the vertical stem is straight. The two diagonal bars are also straight but have a slight curve at their ends. The overall effect is that of a prominent, hand-drawn mark on a piece of lined paper.

Widely used serologic tests fail to detect Lyme disease in nearly half of all cases.
