

Japanese Barberry

University of Connecticut researchers studying an invasive species, Japanese Barberry, have found that the plant creates the perfect, humid environment for ticks. Lyme infected tick populations flourish in the company of this plant and are greatly reduced when it is eliminated.

lymestats.org